Download the Android App Store, here - we've been hard at work lately, and today we're excited to give you a peek into some of the nifty apps that will be joining the Android Store soon, like many more to come. Some already have an official release date, like the Gboard beta (go check it out!), but others haven't been given a date yet, like one really important app — Facebook Messenger for Android. Read More How Does An Oath API Gateway Function? Introduction to an Oath API Gateway An Oath API gateway is an open, secure, and scalable platform that makes it easy to integrate Oath authentication and authorization with various backend applications. An Oath API gateway handles authentication in three ways: token, ID token, and password. A token is an opaque string that tells you who can access your API and what resources the API can access. Using a token, a developer authenticates against your API, and if the authentication is successful, the gateway issues the API consumer with a token that has access to your API. The token allows the API consumer to access that particular resource. Passing a password to the API gateway is similar to using a token, but there's no caching involved. Passwords are much easier to secure and use, but they don't offer the same level of authentication as tokens. Oath's ID tokens are similar to tokens, in that they are opaque strings that represent the consumer's identity. The difference with ID tokens is that you can use them to access multiple APIs, and the gateway doesn't know who the consumer is. This means that the gateway doesn't know where to send the API consumer's access tokens, and it is up to the developer to write code that handles the redirects and token management for API consumers.

Following reports that Jeremy Corbyn plans to recruit more MPs who have been rebuffed by the electorate, a new poll has found that Labour would be massively over the target of winning back 140 seats. An exclusive YouGov survey for The Times found that Labour would win 3.4% of the vote in a general election. In fact, it would be 11 points behind the Tories and increase its share of the vote by 1.3%. This would set Labour only 2 seats short of the 140 that the party needs to win an overall majority of seats in the Commons. Only 6% of the 1,208 people surveyed said they would back Labour at a general election, which represents a drop of 5% since the 2016. The party's share of the vote fell by the same amount, and would be down by 19%. Only 15% of Labour supporters would vote for their party at a general election, while 4% said they would switch to the Tories. Labour supporters would turn to the Lib Dems in third place, with 13% of the vote. Just 6% of Tories would cast their ballot for the Lib Dems. In Scotland, the poll found that the SNP would win 56% of votes, up 5%, with Labour in second place on 17%, up by 2% since the last election, while Labour's share of the vote is down 5% since 2016. In Wales, Plaid Cymru would win 33% of the vote, up 2% since the last election, while Labour's share of the vote is up by 8%, meaning that it would lose 40% of votes. In England, UKIP is still in third place with 19%, down 3% since the last election, but the Conservatives' share of the vote has fallen by 4% since the last election, while Labour has surged by 4%. An overwhelming majority (77%) of voters in the poll said they thought the next election would be won by Labour, with only 6% saying they thought a general election win for
