SGS KeyLogger is a neat utility that can help you to capture the keyboard keys you typed in Windows. It does so by hooking your keyboard driver with a hook API that SGS provides you. This allows you to track all the keys you type, including the windows hotkeys. Once you start SGS KeyLogger, you will see the message that the keyboard hooking process is already in progress. SGS KeyLogger can capture only the keys you press. It cannot capture the ones you click on the Windows menus and buttons. Also, you cannot capture the ones you click when pressing CTRL+ALT+DEL. You can, however, capture the ones you click on the menu items. SGS KeyLogger also allows you to log the special keys, like ALT+Tab and ALT+F4. The idea is that you have some set of parameters that define the keys that should be captured. Then you can make one of them as the default. You can see all the captured keys under the CMD Menu. You can sort them according to time, date, file, program or add new keywords. You can also view all the captured text that was typed. You can view it on the log window or on the Log text box. You can save all the keystrokes as a log file. You can choose the date on which it was saved and the log file name.
