You can connect more than one program to MIDI, and combine them into one music score. For example, you can combine the Apple desktop music notation program GarageBand with the software synthesizer VST (Virtual Studio Technology) from Steinberg Systems, or the HP MusicScore or the PreSonus notation programs. There is no limit to the number of musical devices that you can connect to, so you can use all of the programs that you have on your computer, and enjoy the idea of having all of your creative systems at your fingertips on one MIDI (Musical Instrument Digital Interface) enabled computer. With a MIDI enabled computer, you can play a melody on your music keyboard and use the software harmony functions at the same time. For instance, if you have a MIDI enabled computer with a number of pre-installed sound effects on it, you can enable the sound effects for your melody.

Using the software harmony functions, you can change notes manually, or program in chords (using the side buttons) in groups of three or four notes for a four-part harmony, or even five note chords or eight note chords. The software harmony functions let you move between notes and chords, and hear every detail in the process. Using the note split and meld buttons, you can change notes in any order that you desire. And the audio pitch dimmer lets you hear the difference in the pitch of the notes. The song sequencer lets you hear and experience how you want the music to sound, through a combination of clips, patterns, and live audio. Sequences can be edited, and saved on the hard disk. Or they can be uploaded to the web for web-broadcasting or multimedia sharing. A built-in printout helps you to see exactly where you are in the song, while a built-in file browser helps you to upload scores to the web or to send them to your music partner.
