Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an information reading apparatus using a digital image sensor and an image inputting apparatus. 2. Related Background Art Conventionally, as an information reading apparatus using a digital image sensor, there is known a scanner. This scanner has an image pickup means, a mechanism for moving the image pickup means, a scanner main body for driving this mechanism and other components. As the image pickup means, a linear image sensor is generally used. In a scanner of this type, in order to read an original document, its original is set on an original document table. At this time, an original guide provided on the original document table and a light source incorporated in the scanner main body are used to guide the original document and the light source to the image pickup means. In this structure, however, when the original document is different in size from the original guide, there occurs a difference in the distance from the original document to the image pickup means, and the illumination light incident upon the original document may not be irradiated uniformly. As a result, in the original document of different size, the obtained image is largely shifted vertically and horizontally and a satisfactory image
