(CNN) Is there any link between politics and sexual harassment? As women are coming forward in Hollywood and Congress, we're hearing new stories -- and new questions -- about the behaviors of powerful, famous men. The latest is Rep. John Conyers, who is fighting to stay in office after mounting allegations of sexual harassment against him. And late last night, after he failed to get the majority of votes from the House to remain in office, the Democrats introduced articles of impeachment against Conyers. Last night, Conyers and his lawyer Dianne M. Kelly hosted a press conference to denounce the latest allegations against his client. "The new false allegations against my client are politically and ideologically motivated," Kelly said. "They are an effort by the Democrats to destroy a man who has served our country honorably for decades," she added. The press conference came less than an hour before the Democratic-controlled House of Representatives voted to impeach Conyers and send him to the Senate. The vote was 230 to 197 to impeach, with 17 Democrats joining Republicans to vote no. The next step in Conyers' case is a Senate trial that will be presided over by Chief Justice John Roberts. His counsels and the House Judiciary Committee will be on opposite sides of the courtroom, and senators will decide if there are grounds to remove Conyers from office. In a tweet, President Donald Trump pushed back against the Conyers-related news. The Democrats are very unhappy with Judge Brett Kavanaugh, but they are even more unhappy when he, and others, speak so badly of them and what they are doing. Such lying and protracting the process - and sorry - that is what the Americans hate. You can't go to court and lie! — Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump) November 28, 2018 Democrats, however, have held firm in their criticism of Kavanaugh and what they believe to be efforts to derail his confirmation. They also planned to introduce a resolution Thursday night condemning Kavanaugh's conduct during his confirmation process. "The House of Representatives condemns the conduct of Judge Kavanaugh that was revealed during the hearing and in multiple other sources prior to and during his confirmation process, and will take all necessary steps to oppose any effort to confirm him to the Supreme Court," the resolution, called the "Stop Kavanaugh Resolution" says. "The House of Representatives reaffirms that sexual assault is unacceptable behavior that has no place in our society, and condemns statements made by Judge

What's New in the Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.1.0)?

Vacuum products such as pad-holders, pad-receivers and vacuum cover-plates have been used for a long time in dentistry for various purposes. Cover-plates serve mainly for protecting sensitive preparations against damage by drying and for securing the workpiece (e.g. tooth) to be prepared. Pads are used for sanding of the workpiece, for the exposure of the workpiece as well as for the preparation of its surface for the bonding of fillings. And pad-receivers are used for holding the workpiece by the use of vacuum and for the transfer of the workpiece to various machines. Among the above mentioned vacuum products, vacuum cover-plates for the preparation of a tooth, are the most common. They comprise a vacuum cover-plate, made of a polymer material, for example PPS, the use of which is well known. The material has to be resistant to the heat generated by the apparatus used in preparing the tooth, which is kept at a temperature of about 160-180° C. The known cover-plates are complicated to use. In some cases it is required to place the pad-holder first in the vacuum cover-plate and afterwards remove the cover-plate from the vacuum pad-holder. The pad-holder should be removed from the cover-plate before the cover-plate can be removed from the vacuum source and before the pad can be placed on the cover-plate. In cases where a dental drill is used for the preparation of the tooth, it can happen that the cover-plate is pierced by the drill. In order to protect the tooth, the apparatus is placed in a closed space such as a box. Then the cover-plate is placed over the tooth and an appropriate vacuum is applied. In order to prevent the cover-plate from sticking, a vacuum is applied on the cover-plate during the application of the vacuum. In this case, the vacuum source is usually connected to the cover-plate through a flexible hose. From a user's point of view, it is desirable to use a single cover-plate for a large number of tooth preparations, e.g. for the preparation of all maxillary teeth and all mandibular teeth. The use of several cover-plates requires a large number of different cover-plates and the dental practitioner has to decide, for each tooth preparation, which cover-plate is required. Furthermore, it is often difficult for the dental practitioner to distinguish the cover-plate covering the tooth preparation
