Comic Wednesday I think that pretty well sums up the total lack of Tory approaches to Syria, and another day at Westminster. For our part, us Liberal Democrats oppose an armed intervention in Syria because we strongly believe it would risk a very deep, serious and painful military engagement with a state that hasn't attacked us before, and that could destabilise the whole Middle East region. But also because we strongly believe it would also widen the Syrian conflict, would almost certainly fail to end the blood-letting and the pain of both the people and the country, and most devastatingly, without intending to begin what would be a huge, intense, messy and ugly mess of a long-term engagement, would increase the risk of war with US, Russia and potentially Iran. From where we sit, we think there's no military solution to Syria's problems. I haven't bothered reading about the UN conference this week, because I'm still ill from the late-February flu. Today was the first day of the conference. What we heard was more of the same by the government... and also a best interpretation of a report about the murder of a journalist, which says the killing could be linked to "a wider network of international crime". Boy, this government likes playing four-dimensional chess, doesn't it? Sunday, February 21, 2016 This morning I took the opportunity to go for a walk in the fields opposite Leighton Buzzard's town hall and while I was there I thought I'd capture the day's events, in a detailed post. Today marks an important turning point for a whole country, and also a significant moment for us Liberal Democrats at the news that the Liberal Democrat leader Tim Farron has announced that, following months of internal pressure, and months of speculation, Tim Farron will be standing down as leader of the Liberal Democrats and the Member of Parliament for Westmorland and Lonsdale. The press can't seem to work out whether it's a resignation, a retreat, or a turn-around. In an interview on BBC News, he said: "The magazine is worth more than £1bn, one of the top 10 magazines in the UK, in fact. I don't think I'd be too conscious of that because I spend more time than I'd like to admit on the green benches and not on the backbenches. You'd think that would mean me spending more time in my constituency." Personally, I'd guess that he
