end . Remember when J.P. Rosenbaum was like a boom box through the Army listening to Escape on repeat, a lovable curmudgeon? This picture makes me nostalgic for the days when Rosenbaum said fart jokes seemed like teh funnies. One of my jobs at the Academy is grading the physical fitness tests. Not everyone takes them the same way. The PT test consists of men between 18-61 getting to the ground over 40 different time values. (3 sets each time value). If you can't finish your tests, you go to the next level. If you make it all the way, you get a T-Shirt. I had no idea there were different levels. Looks like I don't get my T-Shirt this year. I need something better. The trailer for Akira has been released. It should be good. The animation company headed by Dave Filoni did the animation on the first Star Wars Clone Wars movie. They always take it well when their work is adapted. There isn't much more to say at this point, as the movie hasn't opened yet. Good reviews out of Tokyo at the three places it premiered. You probably heard about this. I don't know what happened, but late last summer I looked at the purchase and noticed it was a duplicate. This seemed strange, because the complete set had been listed on Amazon for a while and was still listed as an option. I checked the site to see the prices drop to almost nothing. I assumed the listing must have been fake. Then, a few days later, I find this. These are a bit unusual because I never received any correspondence from Amazon telling me I had a duplicate listing. If I had, I probably would have contacted you sooner. They never did. I have no idea where the one on the left came from, but I will never ask again. Amazon never told me about their duplicate listings. If you have a duplicate listing, I will remove it as soon as I learn of it. Might be a little nit picky of me, but that division sign at the end of the Varthis bridge is missing

The addictive game of balancing a cube on a spinning block that you have to guide through a series of levels while dodging various obstacles and enemies. Super Block Breaker is an old classic game with simple gameplay but lots of fun. Duck Shot is a puzzle game in which you must guide a duck through the level avoiding all the obstacles. Your goal is to guide the duck through each level by avoiding all the obstacles while shooting the baddies. The game is very simple and I'm sure you'll be addicted to it in no time. The developers created a really clever control scheme to make it easy to play and navigate around the game. An awesome concept that deserves a high score in my book. One of the fastest scrolling games ever created, Runner Runner makes use of the concept of "Candy Paint" to make this game even more addicting. The game is a combination of two extremely addictive games, Snake and Qix. We play as a little snake who must eat all of the candies that are in its way while jumping from one platform to the other. Just like in Qix, the level scrolls from the bottom up. The gameplay is very similar but there are also some gameplay differences. For instance, you cannot eat a candy if you don't touch it on the way up. Another great project from the talented Manabu Senga and Hideaki Tamura. Their previous collaboration saw release on the PSP as the fun little game, Hot Dog Hunter. This game from Escape Velocity: Nova has the same concept with a different story. I'm usually a sucker for such easy-to-play, addictive games so I gave this one a try. To my surprise, the controls were pretty good and it was really fun. The game was created in just a week and was very polished. One of the best games of 2008, hot dog hunter HD. Being the first game from former CDV Sega alumni Andy Oliver, this game is no doubt going to be a huge success. The game is very similar to a game that we played some years ago called Popeye's Big Adventure. The player must lead Popeye through the level by flicking the screen upwards. The controls are very simple, the goal is to collect 50 ring-tones and release the kraken. There are 8 different levels and a variety of obstacles. I really enjoyed the game, I thought it was a good follow with jQuery Mobile As a Web Developer, I tend to move around a lot between a lot of different technologies and even work on projects using a large spectrum of tools. My current project at work involves some Ruby on Rails (Rails), Cordova (phone + desktop), TypeScript (client-side web development), Node.js, HTML, CSS, Backbone.js, CoffeeScript, Font Awesome, jQuery, and plenty more. It's not just different technologies, but different types of products we work on: Website development, web apps, mobile apps. Also, we are using external software for some of those tasks (Aptana, VS Code, Font Awesome) and this can interfere, every now and then, in our current development process. Along these different and changing features of our projects, other libraries come and go but I realize how important it is to keep my projects simple and rely on the best technology for a given functionality and problem. Part of this process has been keeping track of all that I use and what it is for. That's why I was recently introduced to jQuery Mobile. The possibilities of jQuery Mobile and the jQuery core itself are humongous. There are a lot of features that could be built and they all go beyond this article. The objective of this article was to make some simple web applications with only the basic features and most importantly, easy to setup. We'll be using jQuery Mobile and the jQuery core for all the web development with objects and events. This piece of code goes a lot further than a simple Web Page with basic HTML: It's a little bit long but I'm sure you'll get the idea. That's why I made a short video of this to better explain what's going on. Here's the result, feel free to play with the code below: The perfect way to start is to play with the code as if you were staring at it. After an easy stop, you would have noticed that the play/pause buttons are broken. This is what we are going to tackle: The first thing you might want to know is that if you're considering jQuery Mobile as being for really simple web applications, you're probably wrong. It's one of the most feature full frameworks out there. Using only jQuery Mobile, we can create this app with a lot of focus, and get a not too bad looking interface for it. It

The Commercial Cut in Birmingham was the first major canal to be built in England, and remains today one of the country's most important inland waterways. Constructed in 1796, it successfully linked London to the industrial heart of the West Midlands and even enabled a second canal to be constructed in the area.
