AutoCAD itself offers three types of services: Subscription-based, on-premises and cloud-based. Subscription-based services are the most widely used. Autodesk has an application marketplace where users can download and install the latest released applications and upgrades. Interoperability AutoCAD is compatible with several other CAD packages and with other products from Autodesk, including the building simulation package AutoCAD Architecture. The cross-platform compatibility was extended to the Building Information Modeling (BIM) software Revit in 2010. AutoCAD's compatibility with CAD/CAM packages was greatly enhanced with the release of 2008, and with the release of 2011 even more capable interoperability between other products from Autodesk became possible. In particular, interoperability with other software products from Autodesk has been greatly enhanced since the release of Autodesk 2012. Open standards For many years, the standard file format for rendering was DGN. Beginning in 2008, Autodesk started supporting the DXF file format, and in 2011 it was replaced by the DWG file format. In addition to supporting the native DXF and DWG file formats, Autodesk uses its own C++-based XML format, named A2X (which in turn is an instance of the Open Packaging Conventions (OPC) standard. Autodesk claims the A2X format offers several advantages: allowing access and manipulation of data from different CAD systems, so that the same data can be integrated into other Autodesk applications; ease of conversion to and from the native file formats; and faster loading times. AutoCAD has been certified in accordance with the ISO/IEC 27032:2003 international standard for the OPC-UA protocol, allowing Autodesk applications to work together, including inter-application communication, and to be integrated into other third-party applications. In January 2015, Autodesk announced ca3bfb1094

A branch of Swiss bank UBS is seen in Frankfurt, Germany, September 5, 2016. REUTERS/Kai Pfaffenbach The new fraud, which UBS has said has been reported to police in two German cities, occurs when customers go to bank branches with fake credit cards and then convince staff to withdraw cash, prompting fees of several hundred euros. "The criminal action is reported to the prosecutor's office in Dresden in connection with the registration of an offence under German Criminal Code," prosecutors in Dresden said in a statement. UBS said it did not know the full details of the case, but did know that a branch of its Swiss bank in the central city of Ansbach had received a number of such complaints. "We are currently assessing the issue with the customer and have engaged external experts to provide assistance," a spokesman said. "We can confirm that fraud through the unauthorized use of debit or credit cards is rare." According to UBS, fraud through the unauthorized use of debit or credit cards, including so-called skimming, is rare. In 2011 the bank received 1,143 fraud reports, 1.3 percent of all fraudulent transactions. In 2015, there were 2,351 reports, or 0.8 percent of all transactions. The bank has been widely criticized over its role in the manipulation of the Libor interest rate in London. In a report last week, U.K.'s financial watchdog said UBS was among five banks that colluded on Libor. UBS is still pursuing compensation from the
