Estrogenic effects of crude extract of the lignin-polymerized product from rice straw char and its component analysis. Evaluation of estrogenic potential of the lignin-polymerized product (LP) is made by Yeast Estrogen Screen (YES) and E-screen methods. In YES, E2-induced ferulic acid is converted into catechol estrogens, which are then transformed to o-cresol estrogens through the Maillard reaction. Here, LP was extracted with H₂O, 100% ethanol, and tert-butyl methyl ether (TBE), and the extract was subjected to TBE fractionation and ethyl acetate fractionation. The results showed that the extracts gave the maximum estrogenic activity in both YES and E-screen assays, with active fractions revealed by these two methods. HPLC-electrospray ionization-mass spectrometry (ESI-MS) and gas chromatography-mass spectrometry (GC-MS) analysis showed that a lignin-derived compound, tentatively identified as schizandrin, was among the active compounds in the TBE fraction of LP. This compound enhanced the development of uterine polyps in immature mice exposed to 17β-estradiol, suggesting that the schizandrin-rich fraction is capable of interfering with the physiological regulation of the estradiol receptors. Thayéko Thayéko is a Local Government Area in the Akoko North West LGA of Delta State, Nigeria. Its headquarters are in the town of Okrika. It has an area of 293 km² and a population of 393,380 at the 2006 census. The postal code of the area is 370601. The Thayéko constituency is within the presidential and parliamentary constituency of Akoko North West. The parliamentary constituency, one of the 29 constituencies in the Delta State House of Assembly, was known as the Okrika West Constituency until 2009, after which it was re-created with headquarters at the same town.
