HADASKALA SHUTTLE QUEEN OF BROOKS FUKUOKU. "The World's No. 1 Giant Discovery System"
There was a time when small items were always drawn to the powerful, but now the opposite is true. Small items always attract the weak, and the weak are swept away at the times of calamity. The battles at the front line of a war on the earth have now reached a point of no return, and both sides have begun to move their air strikes. Although the Allied forces are fighting bravely, the losses have already exceeded expectations and they are no longer in a position to wage war. The tides of war are beginning to turn. The Earth System Science Survey office has determined the whereabouts of the enemy's capital and are making their move. The enemy base, which is situated at 170 degrees longitude on the west coast of the western continent, has become the first military target of the Allied forces. "Please see the image of the location we have determined as the enemy's base." "This location has been marked as an enemy base. What should we do?" "Very well, I understand. I shall ensure that there are no losses on this line of march, and send in all the support forces currently transporting from the East Base. Dispatch the army that is currently at the Yoke's Chances Aqueduct in five minutes. Make certain that those who are bearing supplies go to the frontline and the drop-off points. In the meantime, inform all our forces of the target and verify their location, 'How should we proceed with this matter?' "No problem. For your reference, please feel free to look up the location of the target in the Earth System Science Survey and notify all of the commanders to prepare for action at the specified location. Let's move forth." —Earth System Science Survey "Enemy base location: 170 degrees longitude, west coast of the western continent "Please confirm that everything has been done in accordance with the instructions." "All right. We'll gather the forces and mobilize them to the indicated location. Make sure that they are at their highest level of alert at all times." "Understood. I'll transmit all the information to you. See you then." bff6bb2d33

Structural characterization of human heat shock protein 27 in different molecular conformations using size exclusion chromatography. Heat shock protein 27 is a highly conserved molecular chaperone, which is expressed by a variety of cells in response to a wide range of intracellular insults. It is an essential and constitutive constituent of the cellular stress response machinery. It binds to other stress-responsive proteins as well as peptides thereby acting as a protective agent and also functioning in apoptotic pathways. It can exist in three different states, monomeric, trimeric and tetrameric. In this work we have examined structural changes in human heat shock protein 27 monomer in response to heat shock, after covalent modification and after acid denaturation. We were able to characterize the oligomeric conformations of human heat shock protein 27 monomer by size exclusion chromatography. Analysis of oligomeric forms of protein in acidic environment does not show any definite structural transitions of monomer from higher molecular species to lower species. Whereas, analysis of covalently modified human heat shock protein 27 does show that the protein is converted to higher oligomeric conformation. The data implicate various influences on the different oligomeric states of human heat shock protein 27.
