To begin a new document, click the New Document icon (it looks like a document file folder with an arrow at the end) at the bottom of the Photoshop window, shown in Figure 1-3. You can also create a new document from the File menu in the upper-left corner of the Photoshop window. Figure 1-3: Click the New Document icon to make a new document. If you're new to Photoshop, the first thing that you want to do is open a blank image. Opening an Image Image files are saved in many formats, but for the most part, the image files you open or create with Photoshop use the RGB color model. RGB files store color in three channels, or levels, and are a combination of red, green, and blue. In contrast, CMYK files, which store color in four channels, or levels, include cyan, magenta, yellow, and black. Photoshop uses RGB channels, and so you can use any RGB image file for your purposes. Simply double-click a file in Windows Explorer or double-click a graphics file at the desktop in Mac OS X and Photoshop opens. You can also drag the file into the Photoshop window and it opens when you drop it. Figure 1-4 shows a new file opened in Photoshop. Figure 1-4: Drag the file into the Photoshop window to open it. Viewing the Layers Photoshop has what is called a Layer architecture. An object, like a group of faces, can be added and manipulated as a single object in Photoshop. When working with layers, the image is made up of all the objects and areas of color or transparency on a layer of an image file, which is called a layer. If you use a group of layers to create your image, you can click any layer in your working file and then choose Edit Layer from the Layers panel menu. You can manipulate individual layers or groups of layers with tools you've already learned about in Chapters 5 and 6. For example, to change the color of a specific area of your image, you might use one of the tools that change the color of an object, a selection, or a spot area. For example, you can change the entire image at once with the Fill or Adjust Color commands, whereas you might change the color of a specific hair, eye, or object, using the Gradient or Adjust Brightness

As Congress debated the passage of the USA PATRIOT Act, which provides the legal authority for the National Security Agency to conduct widespread domestic electronic surveillance, it was revealed that officials had removed the names of several senators from the original version of the bill. Possibly because they were concerned that Americans would not be able to identify senators who might have supported or opposed the controversial measure, the names of Democratic senators from California and New Mexico were removed from the bill. No mention of these senators appears on the copy of the bill that was approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee and forwarded to the floor by the Senate. It is only in a footnote to a later version of the bill that has been reported by the Associated Press that the names can be found. A Senate Democratic leadership aide said the names were removed after the language was added to the bill. "They (the names) were crossed out. There was no discussion about the names," the aide said. This "sanitization" process is standard operating procedure on the House and Senate floors. No senator is permitted to discuss the bill with constituents, nor to read or analyze any amendment that might be attached to the bill. The House has a similar process called "stacking" for re-authorizing programs that are set to expire. Many Americans who have not been following the story are surprised to hear that the names of Democratic senators could have been removed from the bill because the bill was approved unanimously by the Senate Judiciary Committee. The Senate passed the bill with a vote of 95-1. The full Senate voted 67-28 in favor of final passage. The name of the senator from New Mexico is Hannah Shaman Rehault. The senator from California is Barbara Boxer. These are the names that will appear in the final version of the bill — the one that was approved by a unanimous House vote and sent to the White House. According to an earlier version of the bill published by the Washington Post, Senator Boxer did not want her name to appear on the final bill because, according to aides who spoke on condition of anonymity, she was concerned that her vote might be misconstrued as a vote for warrantless surveillance. Senator Boxer was one of just two senators to vote against the bill. Senator Boxer said in a statement that "On balance, I believe we should have debated and voted on important amendments, including the so-called 'Fourth Amendment Protection Act
