Winery to undergo 40 percent reduction in environmental impact Residents in the Wine-Perth Hills will notice fewer people on the street, but they will get a good cause. Bencie Wine Company plans to cut the environmental footprint by at least 40 percent by moving on from its current 1,800 hectare site at Binns Road and onto another 2,150 hectares of land at the edge of the district. Bencie chief executive officer William George said the company had been on a search for land for the past nine months. "This is the perfect fit. It has got beautiful market access, the grapevines are growing well, and with the right infrastructure, it has got great potential for the future," he said. "I've had in-depth discussions with Mark Harris at SHN and we've found out what is going to make us competitive. "We've secured a provisional plant licence so there are some conditions that need to be fulfilled before we do anything." The commission for the crossing of the Avon River has a deadline of the end of the year to build a crossing, and Bencie has applications to use the existing Warburton-Perth roads to access the site. The old site is on land surrounding the junction of Binns and Warburton roads. In November this year, the company took on the services of consultants from GreenTech Consulting, which will market Bencie overseas. Mr George said GreenTech would assess the best industry practices and return a full recommendation for operating the winery. The results will be made available to the commission. "GreenTech will assess what the winery would need to be set up as an environment-conscious business. This will include, for example, the assessment of what is happening with water, how much we have to wash away, how much to apply for irrigation," he said. Mr George said the winery would complete the environmental approval by the end of the year, and production could begin from the new site by mid-2015. "The site we have chosen is key to our future. We will have access to the [Avon and Hattah Valley] waterways and not have to transport our fruit over long distances by road," he said. Mark Harris, president of South Hedland Agriculture, said Bencie would help stabilise the area by providing jobs in the region. "There

We plan to incorporate a variety of different research techniques in order to understand the molecular and biological basis for the observed neuronal cell death and regeneration of specific nucleic acids and proteins. We will study the effects on neurons of different constituents of the CNS, by: determining what regulatory systems are operative in the CNS following a trauma; characterizing the structures involved in the transport of RNA and protein; exploring the mechanism by which damaged neurons regenerate their processes in an attempt to reestablish synaptic transmission; and investigating the molecular mechanisms of programmed cell death. These images of the Austin-based band Pan Butter have been floating around social media for a few days now, but who would have ever expected the public to start getting excited over a picture of the band's logo? Apart from putting their moniker in black and white and choosing to cut out the third syllable from their name, Pan Butter has created quite a nostalgic image of the band. For those who haven't heard of Pan Butter yet, they're a four-piece doom metal band from Austin, Texas. The band has been around since 2010 and has released one EP, a single and two split albums. The band will enter the studio next spring to record a new album, which will be a compilation of the band's previous material and new, as well. Now that they've released this logo, the band is kind of a new band. The four-piece will be something completely different as they're no longer a side project for Josh Blanchfield and Eric Patterson. Instead, they'll be a full-fledged band with full members. How do you think the logo turns out? Let us know in the comments section below.Q: Loading jar files stored in a zip file to Jetty container I need to add a Maven jar file to the lib folder of a Jetty server. I have created a zip file with the jar files and have stored it in the lib folder of the Jetty server. jarFiles.getFile().list() is returning the list of jar files but how do I load them into the Jetty server? A: I managed to get it working using jetty-maven-plugin. This is the configuration to add the lib folder to the classpath.
