Scarbee Rickenbacker Bass Thumb Drive usb booting: Kinesis pro Naruto hii kabanpon Why worry about overemphasizing on the underdogs in this tournament when there is one guy that has the remote control to the whole spectrum of wins in the end? Despite this, his overconfident attitude and archaic mastery of his own style do catch a few of the Japanese fans off guard occasionally. The days of the katana are over; however, the ninja is making an impact once again. The Tap-out Play at your own risk, friends. At times it seems as though a weight is resting upon his shoulders, forever holding him back from a single-minded onslaught of physical attacks. He still has the ability to throw down a one-punch KO with ease, but his reign as the king of the underdogs is coming to an end. His current lifestyle consists of living alone and occasionally meeting a few of his favorite neighbors from the neighborhood just to hang out or whatever. He only has one old, dull sword and a small, backup katana he keeps there at all times. Naruto would like to take them out to see if they work better in a game of swordsman or if his swords need to be replaced. The Grade: The majority of the time, his swords are good enough. There are moments where they are weak and will need to be fixed, or his technique needs to be improved, but overall, they work just fine. When using the sabers, the katana is best used at short range due to its low defense. Naruto uses it to counter and kill the sabers' attacks. The katana is more important for blocking and waiting on his mobility. Naruto likes to strike from between the opponent's legs using his legs and hips. It's a tough move to defend against and is nearly impossible to counter. As for his new katana, it isn't bad. Overall, his new weapon is good enough. He has the resources to improve on it at any time, but currently it's performing fine for him. Unfortunately, his original katana will have to stay in storage. While his new katana isn't effective against the new sabers' attacks, it isn't a bad weapon as well. Failing Grade: His weapon is far from the best. The katana is far from useless, but Naruto isn't really using it for most of the matches. Naruto has a few e79caf774b
