I. Field The present disclosure relates generally to communication, and more specifically to techniques for supporting location-based messaging in a wireless communication network. II. Background Wireless communication networks are widely deployed to provide various communication services such as voice, video, packet data, messaging, broadcast, etc. These wireless networks may be multiple-access networks capable of supporting multiple users by sharing the available network resources. Examples of such multiple-access networks include Code Division Multiple Access (CDMA) networks, Time Division Multiple Access (TDMA) networks, Frequency Division Multiple Access (FDMA) networks, Orthogonal FDMA (OFDMA) networks, and Single-Carrier FDMA (SC-FDMA) networks. A wireless communication network may include a number of base stations that can support communication for a number of user equipments (UEs). A UE may communicate with a base station via the downlink and uplink. The downlink (or forward link) refers to the communication link from the base station to the UE, and the uplink (or reverse link) refers to the communication link from the UE to the base station. A UE may measure a quality of a connection with a base station and may send a measurement report to the base station. The UE may measure the quality of the connection based on various reasons. The UE may measure the quality of the connection and may report the measurement to the base station during a random access procedure. In some instances, an uplink radio resource (for example, an uplink time or frequency resource or a code resource) allocated to a UE by a base station for a measurement may be limited. In these situations, the UE may have difficulty in reporting the measurement. It may therefore be desirable to have techniques that support location-based messaging in a wireless communication network.A recent study published in the Journal of Reproduction and Infertility has found that only half of those complaining about pelvic and/or back pain seek out medical advice. Of the women who did seek medical attention, more than half were referred to a specialist and more than a third were given an incorrect diagnosis. What is more, Dr Ravi Kiran, who led the research, found that GPs are guilty of repeating the symptoms. "Over one-third of the women interviewed by their GP were told their symptoms were similar to the symptoms of endometriosis. "This is a common and well-recognised symptom of endometriosis
