Q: Qualifying a query for a field I have a requirement where I have to fetch data from the server using a field. select field1, field2, field3 from table where field = "John" As it is written above the field is not an actual field in the table. It should be like this: select field1, field2, field3 from table where field = "John" and column1 = "12" so it would qualify the entire WHERE clause based on the field1 and column1. Is there any way I can do this in SQL server 2005? A: Yes, you can using case expressions with IS NULL: select field1, field2, field3 from table where field = 'John' and (field1 is null or column1 = '12') Find me on: Five ways to improve your spiritual search I'm not a spiritual search, but as the saying goes, 'we all need to search for something'. This can be done by using Blur, Gaussian Blur, the Soften Tool, or a Gradient. Smudging is another type of softening that lets you paint the image with the help of a brush. The most popular way to do this is to use the Smudge Tool. The Smudge Tool paints the image based on the surrounding pixels. If there are too many smudges, they start to smear and blend. You can also blur images by using the blur tool. The Blur tool can be used to blur the entire image or just a specific area. You can also add grain to images by using the Grain Tool.
